
FORBES SIGNS DEAL TO LAUNCH FORBES INDONESIA

First issue to be published later this year

Singapore, 10 March 2010 – Forbes announced the signing of a deal to launch its latest international edition, Forbes Indonesia, in partnership with media group PT Wahana Mediatama. The magazine will be based in Jakarta and the first issue is slated to be published later this year.

Millie Stephanie, President Director, Wahana Mediatama said: “Indonesia is ready for a world-class and independent business magazine, and Forbes is the perfect brand for such a publication. The editorial approach of Forbes is well matched with the growing sophistication and aspirations of the Indonesian business community. For Indonesia, the entry of Forbes into the market signals the country’s growing importance on the global business scene.”

William Adamopoulos, President and Publisher of Forbes Asia, said: “We are excited to be entering the Indonesia market. The timing is excellent, with Indonesia’s economy on a strong growth trajectory and the confidence of the country’s entrepreneurs has never been higher. Indonesia’s business story is exciting, and we look forward to telling that story in the pages of Forbes Indonesia.”

The launch of Forbes Indonesia is a sign of the continued and growing commitment of Forbes to the Asia Pacific region. In addition to this new edition, Forbes has its flagship regional magazine, Forbes Asia, plus three partnerships to publish local editions -- Forbes China, Forbes India and Forbes Korea -- with a combined circulation of 360,000. The Forbes Global CEO conference will be celebrating its tenth year in Asia, with this year’s event to be held in Sydney, Australia on Sept 28 and 29, and to be attended by some 400 high-level delegates and speakers. Forbes.com has a major readership in Asia, getting 1.7 million unique visitors from the region.
